

The nation's leading construction economists build the latest AIA Consensus Forecast

Looking ahead at commercial construction for 2020

The American Institute of Architects, or AIA, compiles information from sources including Dodge Data & Analytics, Construct Connect, Wells Fargo Securities and Associated Builders and Contractors to get consensus on construction forecasts across a range of nonresidential building categories. Twice a year, the panelists project business conditions over the coming 12 to 18 months.

Among the nonresidential construction sectors, retail and other commercial projects offer the brightest forecast, with a projected 0.3% uptick in 2020 as compared to a negative 0.8% decline in 2019, according to the most recent consensus forecast.
